How do you convince a workaholic partner to put more time and energy into a marriage?

Why am I attracted to the wrong "bad boy" type of man, and feel no chemistry with the nice guys?

How can I get my partner to express his feelings to me?

What can I do to really please my partner in bed?

Do one-night stands mean anything?

Is there such a thing as a soul mate? And how will I know when I have found mine?

Questions, questions, questions about relationships. Most people have plenty, and many are exactly the same. How long should you wait for a commitment? Why does my husband hate being pinned about touchy issues late at night? Why does my wife hate quickies? Can you trust someone who cheated? "Show me a relationship without conflict and issues and I'll show you a couple that is either dead or in denial," says author Barbara De Angelis. Her pithy answers are full of catchy labels like Toxic In-laws and Emotional Vampires. She stresses common sense, hard choices, and specific steps toward improvement.

From Library Journal

DeAngelis, who has become the McDonald's of self-help, hits Cupid's mark with her latest offering. In question-and-answer style, she does an admirable job of covering many topics of interest to those who are currently involved in an interpersonal relationship. These topics include love and intimacy, compatibility, commitment, communication and conflict, sex and physical affection, cheating and infidelity, and breaking up and starting over. Though it's unrealistic to expect to answer most questions pertaining to love in only a page or two, still it's nice to know where to go to recover valuable information when needed. The index is ultra-easy to use. A fine addition to any public library. (Introduction not seen..
