Voyeur By Daniel Judson

Remer was an effective Manhattan P.I. until one of his targets found a nasty way to force him into an early retirement. Since then, he has been living an anonymous life, running a liquor store in Southampton, and doing his best to stay in the shadows without ties to anyone or anything. Then a voice from his past reaches out for help, and he agrees to work one last case---a missing person---in order to escape the threat he's lived under for six years.

Trouble is, even if he finds Mia Ferrara, even if she's safe, that might not be enough.

Shamus Award winner Daniel Judson's irresistible noir styling and impeccably drawn heroes---so beset and so human---make Voyeur his most searing thriller yet.

Editorial Review

From Booklist

Darkness. Cold. Bitter wind. These are the backdrops—they’re almost characters—in this grim tale of betrayal, revenge, and pain. There’s no humor in Judson’s bleak story, no stylistic turns. Just a relentless account of one fellow’s attempt to stay alive when everything, including the elements, turns against him. Remer—the only name we have—is a keyhole-peeping PI in Manhattan when someone he’s spied on tortures him so brutally he is put out of business. We rejoin him as a liquor-store owner in Southampton, hiding in darkness. The fates aren’t done with him. Remer is asked to solve a missing-persons case, but he does it too well. A pounding or two later he realizes that he was meant to be part of the crime, not its solution. The bad guys are put out of business, finally, but Remer isn’t consoled: he’s lost too much. The only surcease from pain comes in a personal relationship with a warm girl who lives upstairs. Noir fans will find this novel a bracing jolt of icy air. --Don Crinklaw

Review

Advance Praise for Voyeur

“Judson hits you with a 25,000-volt stun gun in chapter one and doesn’t let up until the satisfying end.”
---Alafair Burke, author of 212

Praise for The Violet Hour

“Shamus winner Judson once again successfully mines Long Island’s South Fork for glittering noir nuggets.”
---Publishers Weekly

“Set around Halloween, this well-written and compelling noir will appeal to fans of J. A. Jance, Martha Powers, and Peter Abrahams.”

---Library Journal

Praise for The Water’s Edge

“Daniel Judson is so much more than a crime-fiction novelist. He’s a tattooed poet, a mad philosopher of the Apocalypse fascinated with exploring the darkest places in people’s souls.”
---Chicago Tribune

Praise for The Darkest Place

“A searing, brooding look at the bleak side of the Hamptons . . . an intense novel.”
---South Florida Sun-Sentinel

“Action packed. Loss and redemption rule in Shamus Award--winning Daniel Judson’s third novel, set in Southampton nights so cold that they could cool off a reader sizzling in this summer’s heat. It’s noir on ice.”
---USA Today

About the Author

DANIEL JUDSON, a Shamus Award winner and a three-time finalist, is the author of five previous novels, most recently The Violet Hour. He attended Southampton College, and his time in the Hamptons (particularly the parts that don't make the society pages) was the inspiration for the setting and characters in Voyeur. He now lives in Connecticut.
