From the Inside Flap

It doesn't matter whether your trading system is based on the fundamental knowledge of economics or technical analysis, the reality is you will occasionally find yourself with open Forex trades that aren't working. And while the reasons for this may vary—from imprecise entries to bad stop-loss values—there are specific ways to rebound from such a situation.

Author Gerald E. Greene, an accomplished trader and developer of real-time charting software for Concorde Forex Group, understands that most traders experience setbacks during their time in this market. But what separates the best of them from the rest is an ability to recognize and recover from a bad trade before it's too late.

In Turning Losing Forex Trades into Winners, Greene addresses this important, yet overlooked, aspect of trading by examining effective methods for dealing with trades that are in a losing position and helping you take advantage of market conditions that will allow you to achieve success.

This reliable resource takes a technical approach to trading, which uses the concepts of trend lines and trend walls, convergence and divergence, and cost averaging to guide you through the rough patches you will inevitably face in today's Forex market. You'll also be introduced to a variety of technical indicators—from MACD and stochastics to moving averages and Fibonacci—that can be implemented in your efforts to manage a bad trade.

And since most trades fall into a gray area, where making the right decision can be a difficult endeavor, this book contains carefully selected examples to help you understand the Forex market when conditions are not fully clear.
