Research-Based Strategies: Narrowing the Achievement Gap for Under-Resourced Students By Ruby K. Payne

A teacher-friendly guide to serving under-resourced students. Lack of personal, social, and material resources can create specific challenges for students, as well as for their schools and communities. Educators are key: Teachers are integral to the lives of so many young people who can and will achieve success if we understand them-and understand how to guide and teach them. Research-Based Strategies, an exciting revision of the Learning Structures Workbook, helps us do all that and more.

Editorial Review

Review

Thank you for a tool that is brilliantly researched, extremely well organized and which allows us to focus on solutions rather than seeing children as problems! What I just love about this book is that it addresses both behavior and academic strategies. It is organized in a way that allows for a choice of strategies. Most importantly, it has allowed this (intervention) team to begin to change the tone of the discussions around students. I love the planning strategies which so many of our students need, but I especially like that it opens the door for discussions about academic interventions owned by adults. It does take work to learn to use the strategies effectively and it takes work to change perception from students owning the problem to our owning the solution. I loaned a copy to our assistant superintendent who is in charge of Support Services. She purchased the book for all of the district intervention teams leaders. When I shared with our Area Principals, our Area Superintendent purchased copies for all of our principals and several of them have indicated they intend to purchase the books for key staff in their schools. I will be sharing how we use the book with intervention team leaders for the district later this month. I am excited to see the Strategy Deck and will purchase one to explore (and no doubt share :‐‐). --Pamela Espinosa, McClintock Middle School in the Charlotte-Mecklenburg School System
